With most men in her village working abroad, USAID supported Punu Tamang and other women farmers in Sindhupalchowk to grow vegetables year round using tunnel farming technology. As a result, Punu now is able to grow enough vegetables to feed her family and also sell the surplus produce to support her son's education.

First graders from Bhaktapur use basic beginner readers to help them learn to read in Nepali. USAID contributes directly to Nepal's National Early Grade Reading Program by developing evidenced-based learning and teaching materials to help children read fluently in Nepali, building a strong foundation to help them succeed in their studies.

Tara Khanal and her husband Chet Narayan Acharya started Modern AgroTech in Nepalgunj seven years ago. USAID's KISAN project helped their company adopt new agricultural technologies, such as modernized machinery and equipment, and employ better financial management and business planning processes. As a result, their sales increased tenfold in the past two years.

Gender equality and social inclusion remains an integral cross-cutting goal for USAID. In Nepal, our efforts have successfully established lasting partnerships among local communities, local leaders, and government officials to fight stigma that affects traditionally marginalized communities. Here a Dalit community once branded as untouchable now shares the same communal tap with non-Dalits in Ranibas of Sindhuli district.
