

USAID Responsive, Effective, Accountable Governance aims to advance principles which are designed to improve legislative and political responsiveness to citizen needs. These principles include: political responsiveness to citizen needs. These principles include: political integrity, legislative transparency, government accountability and citizen inclusion to enrich public discourse increase citizens' political agency and increase political focus on citizen needs. Kosovo's relatively small geographic size and population make it possible for political institutions and elected representatives to engage people directly, yet all too often citizens do not experience meaningful engagement with their political leadership. Community priorities are meagerly addressed by political institutions, while at the same time citizens are not yet able to advocate effectively for their needs.
